

CALL FOR PAPERS

The Economic and Financial Implications of Demographic Change

Italy is the second oldest country in the world after Japan. Very low fertility levels and continuous increases in longevity have led to a pronounced population ageing over the past decades. Due to the past demographic dynamics, the Italian population has gained a negative momentum, which renders the imbalance across broad age groups (those who work, conventionally 15-64 years old, and those dependent, conventionally 0-14 and 65+ years old), more structural and enduring and, as such, difficult to be overcome in a short-term period. Under these circumstances, key relevance assumes the analysis of the impact of population change on the economy of the country, first of all on the economic growth, productivity, and labour and financial markets, but also on the pension systems that ensure the well-being and wealth flows towards the elderly people. This volume of “Economia Italiana”, edited by Giorgio Di Giorgio and Maria Rita Testa (both at LUISS) is focused on the economic and financial consequences of demographic change in Italy and Europe. It is open to contributions based on both micro and macro level analysis that address specific case studies suitable for the Italian situation and broader cross-national comparative studies. The volume is targeted on the economic implications of population change and encourages papers that outline the driving forces of temporal trends and sketch the sustainable directions for mastering future.

All contributions referring to the economic effects of demographic change in Italy and Europe are welcome, especially those on the following topics:

- Long-run trends in Demographic Dynamics
- Effects of Age Transition on Labour Market
- Demography of Pension and Insurance Systems: Implications and Challenges
- Population Ageing and Public Finance
- Impact of Demographic Change on Bank, Finance, and Households' Financial Wealth

Proposals of papers should be submitted in a preliminary form (i.e., long abstract), by April 1st, 2022, to Prof. Giorgio Di Giorgio (gdg@luiss.it) or to Giovanni Parrillo (giovanni.parrillo@economiasitaliana.org), indicating the subject: “Economia Italiana, Call for Papers on Implications of Demography Change”. Final versions of accepted proposals are due by June 30th. Acceptance of the papers will be communicated by November 15th, 2022.
